

Workshop 2 - Stories of strength and vulnerability: communicating climate change & equity

While climate change effects everyone, communities on the “frontlines” are acutely impacted by the consequences of climate change. As we experience worsening impacts from climate change and adopt new technology to take action on climate, how do we make sure that we are not leaving behind disproportionately impacted communities, and allowing everyone to benefit from climate solutions? How can we center the priorities, concerns and solutions from in ways that adapt to each of our communities’ needs? Join us for an interactive session to explore approaches to integrating equity into climate communications and environmental policy-making, with examples from Hawaii and the mainland, and from the grassroots to public sector.
